

Leading Multi-generational Teams

The “Leading Multi-generational Teams” program equips leaders and managers with the essential competencies to understand and lead multi-generational teams, grounded in Neuroscience and Emotional Intelligence (EQ).

PROGRAM MESSAGE

Today's workplace is a vibrant mosaic where the experience and profound insights of preceding generations intertwine with the agile work pace and fresh expectations of the younger generation. Although multi-generational differences are completely natural, if leaders lack the competency to harmonize them, these differences will disrupt the rhythm of collaboration and directly hinder team performance.

Grounded in Neuroscience and Emotional Intelligence (EQ), the program provides practical tools to help leaders understand diverse generational perspectives and transform conflict into synergistic power. Through an interactive, experiential, and application-focused learning approach, participants will master the ability to navigate intergenerational differences and conflicts, enhance collaboration, and lead with empathy. This ultimately fosters a psychologically safe environment where every individual is respected, engaged, and empowered to maximize their potential.

PROGRAM OBJECTIVE

After successfully participating in the program, participants will be able to:

Understand the different characteristics, perspectives, and interaction styles across generations

Apply methods to improve interaction, enhance collaboration, and leverage the strengths of members within a multi-generational team

Build a psychologically safe environment where all members feel heard, respected, and willing to contribute

Identify practical priorities and actions to continue developing their multi-generational leadership capabilities

PROGRAM OUTLINE

PART 1: Understanding the Generations

Explore how generational differences are shaped by social contexts, technology, and life experiences, and recognize how these differences influence perspectives, behaviors, and workplace interactions. Through Neuroscience, Emotional Intelligence (EQ), and empathy practices, participants learn to view differences with curiosity rather than judgment.

PART 2: Understanding Gen Z

Delve into the standout characteristics of Gen Z regarding how they communicate, learn, perceive risks, seek safety, and connect with others, alongside the impacts of the digital environment on their mental health and behavior. From this, identify what Gen Z truly needs from their work environment and leaders - moving beyond generational stereotypes.

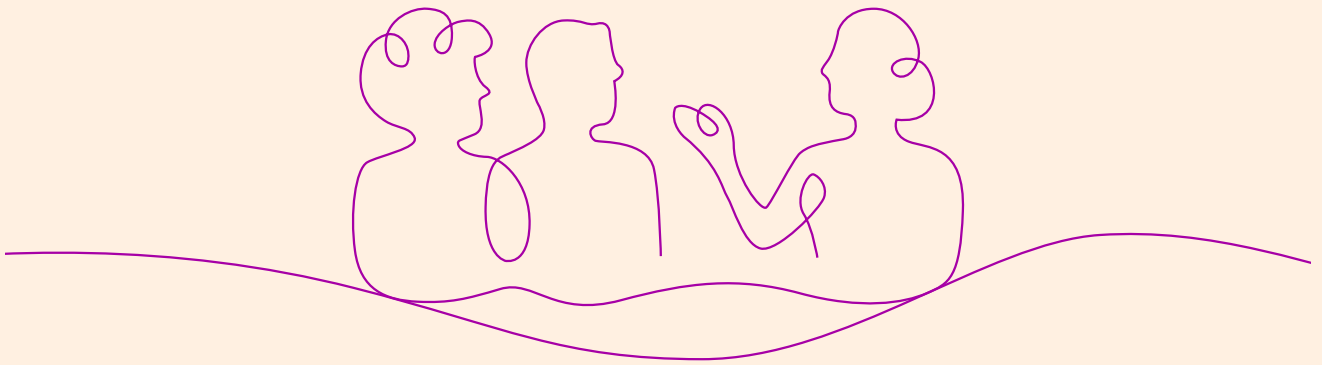

PART 3: Interacting in a Multi-generational Team

Experience firsthand the challenges of a multi-generational team through simulations and real-world scenarios. Participants practice building psychological safety, encouraging people to speak up, balancing diverse voices, fostering constructive debate, and leveraging distinct strengths. Consequently, shift from a mindset of avoiding failure to rapid learning, sharing, and innovation.
